Introduced by

Dr. Luisa Bravo

School of Humanities and Education

This seminar will present innovative methods of co-creation (i.e. collaborative place making), and how they can be applied at a local-level. What new possibilities might open up if there was real co-creation in place-making (as to opposed to consultation, which is often only a step away from tokenism)? How should pre-event activities be fed into and help inform design-led events? How can the impact of outcomes from design-led events be tracked during the follow-on stages of collaborative community planning? What constitutes effective best practice for clarifying the level of substantive planning and design expertise a facilitator requires, if any, at any given community design event?

Q&A session will be moderated by Dr. Luisa Bravo
